

Examples of Run-On Sentences - Must Be Avoided in Academic Writing - 2021 Guide

English writing is a complex task for many students. In primary and secondary classes students are made to learn sentence making and they are made to practice different forms of sentences. As time passes, different forms of content writing reduce their ability to maintain literary balance in their sentences. One of such mistakes often students make are the run-on sentences. The run-on sentence develops when a student is not able to connect two independent clauses with proper conjunction. Sometimes a run-on sentence develops when the punctuation marks are not used correctly. In English writing, a run-on sentence breaks the flow in both reading and essay writing service.

In academic writing, the run-on sentences are strictly prohibited as they seriously affect the quality of English writing. You can find some examples of run-on sentences here below that will help you understand the common mistakes students make in their writing.

Example 1

The most common mistake that results in the run-on sentence is the presence of independent clauses. When two or more independent clauses exist in a paragraph and conjunction is not there to join them, a run-on error occurs. Like

I love the rain. I want to spend time out when it's raining.

You can find two complete sentences here.

Sentence 1: I love rain.

Sentence 2: I want to spend time out when raining.

For writing a correct sentence we need to join two sentences by using any conjunction or by making use of a semicolon. So, a correct sentence can be

I love rain; I want to spend time out when it's raining.

To avoid such errors in sentences, students often perform research on the write essay for me. Remember, you cannot get the required literary material or perfect content just by asking someone to do my essay, rather you need to have a clear understanding of some common mistakes. Another example of a run-on sentence can be

Example 2

A run-on error may also occur when the independent clauses are joined by using a comma splice. The comma splice is when a writer uses a comma to join two independent clauses. Like

Students can leave the library after 10, but prior to that, they will submit the requisite literary material with the librarian.

Now again there are two different and independent clauses

Sentence 1: Students can leave the library after 10

Sentence 2: But prior to that they will submit the requisite literary material with the paper writing service.

In this case, conjunction but is there, and therefore, no comma is required to join these independent clauses. The correct sentence, in this case, will simply be

Students can leave the library after 10 but prior to that, they will submit the requisite literary material with the librarian.

You need to remember that your essay writing service can also make such mistakes and therefore, you need to revise the content as soon as you get it from the service provider. The run-on sentence mistake in a paragraph ruins the efforts of writers and willingly or unwillingly they result in a substantial loss of grades of the student. So, the best way to avoid run-on sentences can be by giving a thorough read to your document. This is the best way you can avoid mistakes like run-on sentences. For the readers, the run-on sentences create trouble in reading and understanding the content. So, therefore, you need to focus on each sentence when writing the Write my paper.
